   (b) Does the writer of document B provide evidence to prove that Meiler Magrath is guilty of any of the complaints made against him? Refer to the document in your answer.

   (20)

4. What does the clerical career of Meiler Magrath tell us of life in Ireland at this time?

   (20)

– Document A –

In this edited extract the historian Alan Ford writes of Meiler Magrath.

As a Franciscan friar, Meiler Magrath was appointed Bishop of Down and Connor by the Pope in 1565.

In 1570 he joined the Established [Protestant] Church and was appointed Bishop of Clogher by Queen Elizabeth. The following year he was made Archbishop of Cashel and held several other dioceses.

He was accused of pluralism [holding more than one religious position at the same time] and nepotism [favouritism to relations or friends].

Despite his faults, he was useful as a negotiator between the Dublin government and Gaelic Ireland.

Source: S. J. Connolly (ed.), The Oxford Companion to Irish History (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1998).

– Document B –

About twenty years after he became Archbishop of Cashel a complaint, of which this is an edited extract, was made against Meiler Magrath.

Meiler is a gambler at cards and dice. He is a drunkard and makes all his guests drink until they are drunk.

He shows pride, anger and greed. He practises simony [buying and selling church positions and services].

The cathedral church in Cashel is in ruin with only one priest, where before it had nine - all because Meiler has taken so much money for himself.

SECTION 2: IRELAND

Ireland: Topic 1

Reform and Reformation in Tudor Ireland, 1494-1558

A (30 marks)

Recommended maximum time: 10 minutes

This edited extract deals with the role of the poet/bard in Gaelic Ireland. Read it and answer the questions which follow.

The poets/bards made their living by eulogising [praising] the Gaelic chiefs and Gaelicised lords. They maintained schools at which members of the bardic families learned the complicated meters of Irish syllabic verse.

Besides their positions as eulogists, they were feared for their satires which, it was believed, could bring misfortune, or even death, to the person satirised. For this reason they were sometimes used as guarantors of treaties.

Source: T. W. Moody, F. X. Martin, F. J. Byrne, A New History of Ireland, III (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1976).

1. How did the poets/bards make their living?
2. What did the students learn?
3. Why were the satires feared?
4. How were the poets/bards sometimes used?
5. Why were English officials in Ireland hostile to poets/bards?

Ireland: Topic 3

Kingdom versus colony – the struggle for mastery in Ireland, 1603-1660

A (30 marks)
Recommended maximum time: 10 minutes

This is an extract from a 1641 deposition. Read it and answer the questions which follow.

Beatrice, the wife of Christopher Hopditch, says that from Christmas 1641 she and her husband were robbed by the rebels of horses, cattle, corn and other goods, worth £150 sterling.

She and her husband fled for the safety of their lives; but her husband was cruelly murdered, as was her brother-in-law, Peter Newman. She says that the rebels robbed all the Protestants in the surrounding countryside.

Source: Bourke, Kilfeather, Lunny and others (eds.), The Field Day Anthology of Irish Writing, volume V (Cork: Cork University Press, 2002).

Establishing a colonial ascendancy, 1660-1715

A (30 marks)
Recommended maximum time: 10 minutes

This edited extract relates to the poet Dáibhí Ó Bruadair. Read it and answer the questions which follow.

The poet Dáibhí Ó Bruadair was one of the last practitioners of the poems of the bardic schools. At least eighty of his poems have been preserved in Irish manuscripts.

His work included political poems and satires in which he scorns the lowbred Cromwellians. In eulogies he praises his patrons: the MacCarthys and Barrys in Co. Cork, and the Fitzgeralds and Bourkes in Co. Limerick. In elegies he mourns their deaths.

Source: based on entry by Margo Griffin-Wilson in Dictionary of Irish Biography, volume 7 (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2009).

1. How much of Ó Bruadair's poetry survived?
2. Who were scorned by Ó Bruadair?

The end of the Irish kingdom and the establishment of the Union, 1770-1815

A (30 marks)
Recommended maximum time: 10 minutes

On the 12-13 June, 1798, crown forces defeated the United Irishmen of Co. Down, led by Henry Munro, at Ballinahinch. This is an edited extract from an eyewitness account. Read it and answer the questions which follow.

They wore no uniforms, but all wore green with a knot of ribbons of that colour in their hats. By far the majority had pikes, which were formidable weapons at close quarters. Others wore old swords and some had merely pitchforks. Those of the higher class were armed with guns.

After inconclusive fighting that evening, fighting resumed at first light. At around seven in the morning rebel ammunition ran out.

Source: Jonathan Bardon, A Narrow Sea: The Irish-Scottish Connection in 120 Episodes (Dublin: Gill Books, 2018).

This is an edited extract from the Spanish ambassador's description of the young Henry VIII. Read it and answer the questions which follow.

His Majesty will enter his twenty-fifth year the month after next. Above the usual height, with auburn hair combed straight and short, he is the handsomest ruler that I ever set eyes on.

He speaks French, English and Latin, and a little Italian. He plays well on the lute and the harpsichord. His Majesty draws the bow with greater strength than any man in England and jousts marvellously.

Source: M.D. Palmer, Henry VIII (Harlow, Essex: Pearson Longman, 1971).

1. How old is the King?
2. What evidence from the extract shows that the ambassador admired Henry VIII?
3. Other than English, what languages were spoken by the King?

Religion and power: politics in the later sixteenth century, 1567-1609

A (30 marks)

Recommended maximum time: 10 minutes

This edited extract refers to the decline of the port of Antwerp. Read it and answer the questions which follow.

There were religious disorders in Antwerp in 1566. This caused many bankers to leave. In 1576 the city was plundered by Spanish troops and, in 1583, by French soldiers.

Antwerp's financial section went mostly to Geneva and Amsterdam. Trade in English cloth went to Holland and Hamburg. The Dutch seized the oriental trade. Sugar and printing went to Rotterdam and London.

In 1598 Philip II excluded Antwerp merchants from direct trade with Spanish and Portuguese colonies. In time it almost vanished as a port.

Source: Herbert Heaton*, Economic History of Europe* (New York: Harper and Brothers, 1936).

1. How did religious disorders affect Antwerp in 1566?
2. What group plundered Antwerp in 1583?

This is an edited extract from an eyewitness account of the Great Fire of London, 1666. Read it and answer the questions which follow.

The fire began on the night of 12 September, about one o'clock, in a baker's shop in Pudding Lane. Most of the houses there were of wood, some being coated with pitch and some with plaster. As there was a strong wind blowing the flames got the upper hand before daybreak, to such an extent that all attempts to control them were futile.

King Charles II, and the Duke of York, and many other notables, were on the spot on the first day of the fire and helped to maintain order. The inhabitants of the district seized as much of their property as they could carry and made off to wherever they could find safety. In all, there were burnt 12,000 houses and 80 churches, including St. Paul's.

Source: C. R. N. Routh, They Saw It Happen, 1485-1688 (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1956).

This edited extract relates to the Boston Tea Party, 1773. Read it and answer the questions which follow.

The passing of the Tea Act (1773) was resented by the American colonists. Resistance took different forms.

The tea sent to Charleston was landed, but popular pressure prevented it from being offered for sale. The tea sent to New York and Philadelphia was rejected and sent back to England.

At Boston, on 16 December 1773, men disguised as Indians, boarded the tea ships and threw the ships' cargoes into the harbour.
