   (b) Is document B a primary source or a secondary source? Give a reason for your answer.

(20)

4. In what ways did Dublin change during the reign of Elizabeth I, 1558-1603?

(20)

– Document A –

This edited extract from a 1596 report by an English military official in Ireland describes the impact of the Nine Years' War on Dublin.

The town of Dublin is reduced to poverty as a result of troops being constantly sent over from England. The soldiers always lack money, food and clothes.

The citizens are forced to feed them and find accommodation for them – and are never paid for their services.

It is clear that lack of justice has caused all rebellions in Ireland. So, a just solution to the citizens' problems would be welcome.

Source: Colm Lennon, The Lords of Dublin in the Age of the Reformation (Dublin: Irish Academic Press, 1989).

– Document B –

In this edited extract, historian Colm Lennon deals with similar material.

The lodging of troops in the city households caused much resentment. Sick and wounded soldiers were forced to lie, under shelters, in the streets, in the absence of a suitable hospital.

The increased demand for food caused prices to soar. Also, there was risk for the citizens, as well as for the soldiers, of infectious diseases.

Then, in March 1597, a massive explosion of barrels of gunpowder, stacked on the quayside, caused terrible loss of life, with 126 killed and much destruction of property.

SECTION 2: IRELAND

Ireland: Topic 1
Reform and Reformation in Tudor Ireland, 1494-1558

A (30 marks)
Recommended maximum time: 10 minutes

This edited extract shows that the Irish learned classes, especially poets/bards, experienced the hostility of the Dublin government. Read it and answer the questions which follow.

In 1534 it was ordered that if any Irish minstrels, rhymers [poets], bards or story tellers asked for anything from people in the English Pale, they would face the loss of their goods or imprisonment.

A law of 1549 ordered that no poet could compose a poem in honour of any person except the King. Otherwise, the offender would face the loss of his goods and imprisonment.

Source: based on material in T.W. Moody, F.X. Martin, F.J. Byrne, A New History of Ireland, III: Early Modern Ireland, 1534-1691 (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1976).

1. Name one group against whom the 1534 order was directed.
2. In what part of Ireland did the 1534 order apply?
3. What was a poet forbidden to do by the law of 1549?
4. What punishment would a poet face for disobeying the law of 1549?
5. Briefly, what was the importance of the file/bard in Gaelic Ireland?

Ireland: Topic 3

Kingdom versus colony – the struggle for mastery in Ireland, 1603-1660

A (30 marks)
Recommended maximum time: 10 minutes

This edited extract refers to Luke Wadding. Read it and answer the questions which follow.

Born in Waterford, 1588, Luke Wadding was a Franciscan, a scholar and a leading light in the Irish college movement.

He founded St Isidore's in Rome in 1625 for Irish Franciscans. Under his influence, similar colleges were established in Prague (1629) and Paris (1653), also in Poland (1645) and Italy (1656).

In 1642 Wadding arranged for Owen Roe O'Neill to return to Ireland. He supported Rinuccini but came to consider some of the Archbishop's actions mistaken.

He edited the works of St. Francis and wrote a history of the Franciscan order.

Source: based on the Wadding entry in S. J. Connolly (ed.), The Oxford Companion to Irish History (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1998).

1. Where and when was Luke Wadding born?
2. For whom was St Isidore's founded?

Ireland: Topic 5

Colony versus kingdom – tensions in mid-18th-century Ireland, 1715-1770

A (30 marks)
Recommended maximum time: 10 minutes

This edited extract deals with Whiteboy activity. Read it and answer the questions which follow.

On 1 March, 1762, a large body of Whiteboys broke into the house of the parish clerk of Affane, Co. Waterford, and carried him off on a hand barrow full of thorns. When this broke, they marched him naked for two miles to Cappoquin, stopping on the way to dig a grave in which they threatened to bury him alive.

It was reported that when they reached Cappoquin, 'they entered the town in triumph with pipers and fiddlers playing disaffected [disloyal] tunes. They paraded up and down the streets and fired several shots. Later they left in the most triumphal manner.'

Source: Ian McBride, Eighteenth Century Ireland (Dublin: Gill & Macmillan, Ltd., 2009).

1. Into what house did the Whiteboys break?
2. What threat was made by the Whiteboys?
3. What type of tunes were played by the Whiteboys?

The end of the Irish kingdom and the establishment of the Union, 1770-1815

A (30 marks)
Recommended maximum time: 10 minutes

This edited extract refers to St. Patrick's College, Maynooth. Read it and answer the questions which follow.

St. Patrick's College, Maynooth, the principal seminary for the training of Irish Catholic priests, was established by act of parliament in 1795.

At a time when the French Revolution had caused the closure of many continental colleges in which Irish students were trained for the priesthood, the government was seeking to attract moderate Catholic support.

Many commentators claim that the creation of Maynooth College led to the appearance of a new brand of priest – of humbler social origins and stronger political views – than those trained in the continental seminaries.

Source: based on material in S. J. Connolly (ed.), The Oxford Companion to Irish History (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1998).

1. What was the function of St. Patrick's College?

This is an edited extract from a letter by Christopher Columbus to Sanchez, the Royal Treasurer of Spain (1493). Read it and answer the questions which follow.

With further assistance from them, I can promise our Majesties [Ferdinand and Isabella] as much gold as they need, as well as spices, cotton and aloe wood. Also, as many heathen [pagan] slaves as they may choose.

My successes so far have been due less to myself than to the Christian faith and the piety of their Majesties. Now the souls of many pagans, which would have been lost, will be saved.

Source: Katherine Leach (ed.), Documents and Debates: Sixteenth Century Europe (London: Palgrave Macmillan, 1981).

This edited extract refers to the Spanish Armada. Read it and answer the questions which follow.

On the night of 6 August, 1588, the English sent fireships among the Spanish fleet as it lay at anchor off Calais.

The panic-stricken Spaniards at once put to sea, but not without losing several ships by fire or by being wrecked on the French coast.

The English now outnumbered the Spaniards and, in a final engagement with them off Gravelines, inflicted on them the loss of sixteen ships and 5,000 men.

Source: based on material in E. Wyatt-Davies, A History of England for Catholic Schools (London: Longmans Green, 1903).

On hearing that a telescope had been invented in Flanders, Galileo Galilei decided to make a better one for his own use, as he tells his brother-in-law in this edited extract from a letter (dated 29 August 1604). Read it and answer the questions which follow.

It is now nearly two months since the news of a spy-glass [telescope] by which very distant things could be made to look quite close. I made one that surpassed the original.

When word of this reached Venice, I was ordered to demonstrate it before the entire Senate. Such was the senators' amazement that, though old, several gentlemen have climbed the stairs of the highest campaniles [bell towers] to view ships at sea two hours earlier than they would have been visible before my telescope.

For the effect of this instrument is to represent an object that is, for example, fifty miles away, as large and as near as if it were only five.

This edited extract deals with international trade, 1660-1715. Read it and answer the questions which follow.

King Charles II of England had a passion for exotic birds and the East India Company was expected to contribute new specimens to his collection. In 1664 the Company could not find a suitable present so, instead, the directors offered 'a packet of exotic herb' – including tea.

The new beverage was a success at Court. Then the aristocracy and others took up drinking it. By 1715, tea beat silk as the East India Company's principal import. However, it remained a drink reserved for the well-off, almost to the end of the century.

This edited extract relates to the rise of Manchester. Read it and answer the questions which follow.

From the 1770s technological change stimulated the growth of Manchester. A series of inventions mechanised the processes of spinning and weaving.

Arkwright's water frame spinning machine offered the prospect of an enormous increase in textile production. But the water power needed to drive it was not to be had in Manchester.

James Watt's new steam engine allowed Manchester to overcome its lack of power. Local towns contributed to the growth of Manchester, a process facilitated by the building of canals that connected them to the city.

This is an edited extract from a description of the Nine Years' War written by Fynes Moryson, an English official in Ireland at the time of the war. Read it and answer the questions which follow.

Many of the Munster men, about October 1598, broke into rebellion and joined themselves with Tyrone's forces. They spoiled the country, burnt the villages, and pulled down the houses and castles of the English undertakers.

The undertakers in Munster were in great part to blame for their own miseries. They should have built castles and brought over colonies of English, but this was not done by them. They all kept Irish servants and tenants, which were now the first to betray them.

Neither did these undertakers make any resistance to the rebels, but left their dwellings and fled to walled towns.
